Your rights Scotland

A short guide to your rights as an NHS patient in Scotland with intimate health needs.

You have the right to...

Questions you could ask your doctor:

- What products are available to help with my condition?
 What are the advantages of different models of device?
- Could different products help me manage my condition?
- If there is a product you feel would help you manage your condition, ask your doctor or nurse whether they can prescribe it. If they say no, you can ask for an explanation why?

Questions you could ask your pharmacist or medical devices provider:

- Are there any supplementary items that should accompany this product?
- Can you send the order to my home?
- What similar products are available from other manufacturers?
- How do I use and look after these products? Is there anyone I can talk to about it?
- Is there anything you can do to help me manage my condition? Can you prepare me an online personalised care plan?

Further information

- [1] You have the right to be given the information you need to make informed choices about your health care and treatment options. (The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities)
- [2] You have the right to be involved in decisions about your own care and treatment. (The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities)
- [3] Suppliers should fulfil orders for any appliance approved for use on the NHS. If they are unable to fulfil an order they must either forward the order on to another supplier (if they have your permission to do so) OR provide you with the details of two other suppliers who can fulfil it.
 - Suppliers should be able to provide appropriate advice about the products they sell, including how to use, clean and care for them. They may also be able to offer you online support to help you manage your condition, for example by preparing you a personalised web-based care plan.
- [4] You have the right that the NHS services you receive in Scotland take your needs into account. (The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities). Whilst your regional NHS Board will need to take into account the needs of all local residents in funding decisions, you can always ask why a product you feel would help with your condition is not available.
- [5] You can decide how to get your prescription supplies dispensed. You can obtain prescription supplies in four different ways:

- i. You can let the supply company (sometimes called DACs) handle everything you place an order with them and they will contact your GP to get the prescription;
- ii. You can place an order with a supply company and then send them your prescription yourself;
- iii. Your GP can handle everything you can ask your GP to send the prescription to your supply company of choice. Some GP practices also have a dispensing arm that may be able to provide your appliance; or
- iv. You can take your prescription to a local pharmacy.
- [6] You have the right to have supplies delivered discreetly to your home. The packaging and method of delivering incontinence, stoma, catheter, erectile dysfunction, wound drainage and anal irrigation appliances must not indicate the nature of what is being delivered.
- [7] You have the right to an urgent supply of appliances from a supplier without a prescription, if your doctor (or another health professional who can make prescriptions) asks them to do so. This will require your doctor (or the other prescriber) to agree to provide a prescription within 72 hours.
- [8] Pharmacies and suppliers should provide you with supplementary items available on the NHS (such as disposable wipes and disposal bags) when fulfilling a prescription for incontinence, stoma, catheter, erectile dysfunction, wound drainage and anal irrigation appliances. You may want to ask your GP or nurse what should come with your prescription in case there is anything you will need to order yourself.
